Abstract

Dimitris Dragatakis’ (1914-2001) first works date from the early ‘40s and reveal influences of the traditional music of the composer’s fatherland, Epirus, as well as of the Greek National School of Composition. It is in the ‘50s that Dragatakis’ musical style begins to change, gradually incorporating elements by late romanticism, neo-classicism and finally, in the very beginning of the ‘60s, of the avant-garde of the ‘50s. In his extremely productive decade of the ‘60s we can see a major change in his music, as he starts using certain characteristics of the avant-garde trends, gradually combining them with his musical background, to form little by little his own very personal way of creating music. In my paper, I define the kind and the importance of influences of avant-garde in the music of Dimitris Dragatakis, as well as the phases that can be seen in his works up to the late ‘60s. For this purpose I, on the one hand, present fragments of certain works and focus on their special musical characteristics, and on the other hand reveal new biographical details that show how Dragatakis became familiar with the modern music of his age, considering that he never took composition lessons and did not travel abroad until 1973.
